"FEARLESS FOOLS"
Century Two-reel Comedy
Starring
Harry Mc Coy

When the car they are washing runs away from them and is nearly wrecked, the two washers lose their jobs at the garage and go home to bury themselves in newspapers. Not finding anything to suit their fastidious tastes in positions they venture forth from their room.

They don't get any farther than the hall when they meet their neighbor's wife who has been locked out. They try to assist her and are accused by the husband of flirting with his wife. He chases them and they seek refuge from his wrath on the ledge outside their window, at a dizzy height. Several times they just escape a horribledoath on the hard pavementbelow but ~~xxx~~ finally manage to get back into the house and give the enraged husband the slip.

Their uncle dies suddenly and leaves them among other valuables a car and chauffeur with the stipulation that they must retain the services of the driver. He proves to be none other than the husband and when he finds out who is now bosses he gives them a ride that they will never forget. It ends at the bottom of a huge cliff and the boys are just about able to poke their heads through the wreckage for the final fade out.
